Nearly Ninety Pictures in Oils Hung in Hemicycle at Corcoran Gallary-Places of Honor Awarded to W. B. Closson and Miss Hanson.

street.

"The Valley Mill," No. 32, by S. Ed-

lightful subject in nature. In the treatment of this subject Mr. Whitman has shown the tendency toward the theories of the advanced impressionists, but seems to have fallen somewhat short in the scale of errors. In other words, in this picture he has arrival. In this demonstration he has remembered that something more than mere color and vibration are required in a composition of nictorial merit.

bration are required in a composition of pictorial merit.

Carl Weller is strongly represented in a single landscape, and H. C. Davies, in "Summer Clouds," pictures the top of a hill with a sky that is summerlike and suggestive of heat.

As a whole the exhibition is singularly free from work of a mediocre standard, and from pictures which by their extreme advocacy of any known school are conspicuous.

Hungry As a Bear

From a Yes-Not Kind of Hunger,

You're a Dsyneptic

and Can't Eat

The seventeenth annual exhibition of the Society of Washington Artists will give the public a better opportunity for the formation of a correct standard of the achievements in art during the last year than other exhibitions have given. The present exhibition is almost entire y composed of the work of local painters, but four exhibitors are from out of town. The collection will be opened of town. The collection will be opened to the artists and their friends in a is a well-arranged composition of a deprivate view tonight at 8 o'clock, and opened to the public tomorrow and be ment of this subject Mr. Whitman has opened to the public tomorrow and be continued dally until March 25.

Nearly ninety pictures in oils have been accepted by the jury of selection and arranged on the walls of the hemicycle of the Corcoran Gallery.

The place of honor on the curved wall of the hemicycle, which is the only award, has been assigned to William B. Closson, of Kendall Green, a new exhibitor, who has deservedly won the distinction given. His paintings are all distinctively decorative in their character and depend upon color and the arrangement of the figure or figures conacter and depend upon color and the arrangement of the figure or figures contained in the compositions. These figures charm by their grace of form and luminous color rather than by the size of the composition of which they form a part. In his art expression Mr. Closson is marked by a strong individuality and decided tendencies toward imaginative effects.

Woman Wins Honor.

The second place of honor-the central space on the flat wall of the hemicycle-has been given to Miss Bert The picture selected for this place is No. 62, "Portrait, Mrs. C. of a lady with long draperies. coior scheme although limited is effective. Miss Hanson is represented by two other pictures, No. 54, "Mother and Child," a composition which defies conventionalism, and No. 4, "Buster," an interesting study of a group of dogs.

E. H. Miller is well represented in this exhibition, although he does not confine his art work to paintings in oil. Mr. Miller is the senior of the painters of this city, having been engaged in art work here since 1848. In No. 7, "Sunshine in the Forest." Mr. Miller has an accurate bit of wood interior carefully drawn, good in color and pleasing balance of light and shade. Interior carefully drawn, good in color and pleasing balance of light and shade. No. 46, "Early Morning," is a subtle interpretation of a simple landscape at the time in the morning when the mist surrounds all objects with an air of mystery. No. 66, "Portrait," is a dignified and thorough portrait of a young girl, in which quiet tones of color have been in which quiet tones of color have been severely maintained. No. 59, "The Waning Moon," is a quiet hillside with a rough road seen under the dim light of the moon. A broken caisson tells the story of the defeat of battle. The effect is wonderfully accurate in its sensation of a landscape under the moonlight. moonlight.

Max Weyl's Four Pictures.

Max Weyl, who may be considered the confine themselves to painting in oils is represented by four pictures, of which No. 19, "A November Day," is probably the best. In this he has created a picture which tells the story of the season, in color, and in temperature, so accurately, that his larger composition, "Forest in the Sapphire Country." No. 25, seems less interesting than before. His No. 23, "Blue Ridge at Albemarle," is a composition strong in the handling of masses, and one of charming simplicity, not dependent upon. A good many people get mad when you tell them they've got dyspepsia, but way down deep in their stomachs they know they've got it.
"I'd love to eat it, but I can't," is one the handling of masses, and one of charming simplicity, not dependent upour brilliancy of color.

R. N. Brooke is well represented, and by pictures which show by their variety that the artist is not confined to a narrow field of work. James Henry Moser is represented by two pictures. Moser is represented by two pictures. His larger canvas. "In the Berkshire Hills," is a pleasing arrangement of a hillside, a small pool of water and an attractive sky. In the exhibition it ranks as one of the large pictures, and its carrying qualities and color are thoroughly pleasing.

E. C. Messer exhibits eight pictures, some of them of small size, but all worthy of the exhibition, and of careful study.

In the painting of still life, of which there are several examples, Miss Aline E. Solomons has produced a wonderful E. Solomons has produced a wonderful success, and one worthy of adoption as a standard, in her No. 27, "The Red Jar," This work, which particularly appeals to painters, rather than to the layman, has received high commendation from some of the best painters of this city. In color it is not only rich, but pleasing; in arrangement it is effective, and the accessories are wholly harmonious.

Luclen W. Powell, is as strong in his color arrangements as ever, and the subjects selected are of his best. Pictures reminiscent of foreign lands are the subjects presented by Miss Bertha E. Perrie in five of the six pictures forming her exhibit. R. le Grand Johnston presents an effective moonlight composition in his "On the Plains of Angera."

Robert Coleman Child exhibts "A Summer Day." This is a picture which will probably arouse criticism, but it is to be commended that Mr. Child has the courage of his conviction, in color and arrangement. The composition has in it much of the feeling of summer, but it. age of his conviction, in color and arrangement. The composition has in it much of the feeling of summer, but it is a summer day in which there is no firm conviction of rest and quiet, the hillside, the road, the clump of trees, and the sky are full of vigor. This is not a day of rest, but of work, of en not a day of rest, but of work, of endeavor.

Mrs. E. J. Smith, in "Portrait," has seriously, and in a wholly dignified manner, presented the portrait of a woman of mature years, well gowned and well posed. Ruel Pardee Tolman has succeeded well in the three portraits included in his exhibit. While "A' Hillside of Baybush and Sumae" is a broadly painted hillside by Spencer Baird Nichols, it is, nevertheless, one of the most attractive landscapes in the exhibition, impressionistic in breadth. It is conservative in color, and needs no explanation to be appreciated by the layman.
